Nocturnal Animals (281 words)

When you go to sleep at night, one part of the animal world is just getting up. It is the world of nocturnal animals. Nocturnal animals are animals that are more active at night than during the day. They sleep during the day, often in a burrow or den. Many desert animals are nocturnal in order to escape extreme daytime heat.

Most nocturnal animals come out at night to look for food. They generally have highly developed senses of hearing and smell, and specially adapted eyesight to help them survive in the dark. Besides, the dark of the night helps keep nocturnal animals safe. Even if an enemy is near, the nocturnal animal is hard to see.

The raccoon is one kind of nocturnal animal. Some raccoons live on the ground, and some live in trees. Raccoons like to eat fruit and fish. They also like to eat corn and all kinds of seeds. Because of this, farmers do not like to have raccoons in their fields. The raccoon has dark fur with light circles on its tail. The dark circles around its eyes look like a mask.

The possum is another animal that moves about at night and sleeps during the day. It eats small animals, insects, and all kinds of plants. The possum is about the size of a cat. It can hang upside down by its tail. The possum is a good climber and often lives in trees. The possum has a special way of helping itself. When an enemy is near, the possum rolls over on its back and stays very still. When the possum does this, the enemy thinks the possum is dead and goes away.

The Great Barrier Reef (282 words)

Along the eastern coast of Australia is the world's largest reef system and one of the most fascinating areas of the natural world --- the Great Barrier Reef. It can be seen from the outer space and is the world's biggest single structure made by living organisms. It isn't really one long reef. It is actually made up of about 3,000 separate coral reefs and 900 islands stretching for over 2,600 kilometers.

The Great Barrier Reef supports a wide diversity of life. It is like a large city under the sea filled with many species of marine life. More than 2,000 species of fish inhabit it. There are also about 400 different species of coral and 500 species of seaweed. The fish include several kinds of sharks. The most common one is the blacktip reef shark. It gets its name from the black coloring on the end of its fins.

The blacktip shark isn't a dangerous shark, but there are dangerous animals on the reef. The tiger shark, for example, is an aggressive shark. There are several kinds of poisonous jellyfish, and there are poisonous sea snakes, too. Stingrays can injure people with their sharp tails. Divers have to be careful on the Great Barrier Reef.

Some animals on the reef are dangerous to people, but people are even more dangerous to the reef. Agriculture in Australia has caused water pollution, and this has already killed some areas of the reef. Divers cause damage when they take bits of coral from the reef, or when they stand on the reef. Unless humans learn to respect and protect natural treasures like the Great Barrier Reef, these treasures could one day disappear from the earth.

The Dating Supermarket (288 words)

Although Paris is often considered the city of romance, close to a million adults who call it home are single. Many single people say that France's capital is one of the most difficult places to meet people. The complaints of this lonely group have inspired a new phenomenon known as "supermarket dating." At Galerie Lafayette Gourmet, singles can shop for more than just the items on their grocery list. They can look for someone who has blue eyes, brown hair, and is 1.8 meters tall, or whatever may be on their romantic shopping list.

At this Paris location, single people of all ages can schedule their shopping for Thursday nights between 6:30 and 9:00 P.M. When they walk through the door, they pick up a purple basket to advertise that they are looking for love. They try to arrive early because the baskets disappear quickly, and then they have to wait in line for their turn to wander the store aisles. With purple baskets in hand, shoppers can consider their romantic options while they pick out their groceries. When they are ready to pay, they can go to the checkout line that is especially for singles who want to chat.

Most of the people who look for love in the supermarket are skeptical of internet dating. They know that it is too easy to embellish one's appearance or to lie about one's age over the internet. The supermarket, on the other hand, is considered a safe and casual environment in which to meet a potential match. In addition, what one finds in another's grocery basket can say a thing or two about that person's character or intentions.

It's possible to find more than food at a grocery store.

Larry Walters (284 words)

From the time Larry was small, he was fascinated by balloons and dreamed about using them to fly. When he was 33 years old, he decided to make his dream come true. He purchased the essential gear---an ordinary aluminum garden chair and 42 weather balloons. He also got an air gun because he planned to shoot the balloons when he was ready to land. His girlfriend convinced him to get a parachute, too, just in case.

Larry planned to fly 483 kilometers across the Mojava Desert, beginning from the backyard of his girlfriend's house near Los Angeles. On the day of his trip, he tied the chair down with ropes and attached the helium-filled balloons to it. Then, he sat down in the chair with his gun and his parachute. He was ready to go.

Larry's friends untied one rope. Suddenly, the other ropes broke, and Larry and his chair rose rapidly toward the sky. He ascended much more quickly and much higher than he had expected. Before he knew it, he was 5,000 meters above the ground.

He was high up in the sky where the air was thin and cold. An airplane pilot spotted him and reported him to the authorities. Meanwhile, shivering with cold, Larry decided that he wanted to descend. But he had dropped the gun during his ascent. All he could do was float wherever the wind took him.

Eventually, Larry and his chair floated down. The ropes holding the balloons became tangled in some power lines, and the chair hung just two meters above the ground. Even though Larry was fined by the authorities for violating flying regulations, he had fulfilled his dream of flying with balloons.
